

Contributors

Julian Bass is a lecturer in the School of Computing at Robert Gordon University, Aberdeen, Scotland. He was formerly a higher education IT advisor at the Higher Education Strategy Centre in Addis Ababa. He is a chartered fellow of the BCS, the Chartered Institute for IT.

Tracy Cull is a director of Kulima Integrated Development Solutions, a climate change adaptation consultancy based in South Africa. She specializes in designing bespoke training and capacity building around climate change and development for policy makers and practitioners in southern and eastern Africa.

Kevin P. Donovan is a Fulbright fellow at the University of Cape Town. His research is based at the Centre for Social Science Research and focuses on the implications of mobile phones and biometrics for poverty alleviation and privacy.

Carleen F. Maitland is an associate professor in the College of Information Sciences and Technology at Penn State University in Pennsylvania. Her research focuses on institutional and organizational factors influencing ICTD. From 2010–2012, she served as a program manager at the U.S. National Science Foundation.

Edgar Maldonado is a visiting lecturer instructor in the Computer Information Systems Department at the Metropolitan State University of Denver. He has a PhD in information sciences and technology from Penn State. His research interests are national-level information and telecommunication Open Source policies.

Brian Nicholson is a senior lecturer at Manchester Business School and codirector of the Manchester Centre for Development Informatics in the UK. His research focuses on global outsourcing, software industry development, and ICT for development. He has published two authored books and 20 refereed journal articles.

Eswaran Subrahmanian is a research professor at the Institute for Complex Engineered Systems and an adjunct professor in the department of Engineering and Public Policy at Carnegie Mellon University, Pittsburgh. He has more than 80 publications, three edited books on engineering design, and a book on ICT for development.

Andrea H. Tapia is an associate professor with the College of Information Sciences and Technology at Penn State University, Pennsylvania. She is a sociologist who studies the intersection of information technologies, crisis response, and humanitarian relief. Her recent work focuses on making social network data useful to first responders.

Louis-Marie Ngamassi Tchouakeu received his PhD in 2011 from the College of Information Sciences and Technology at Penn State University in Pennsylvania. He is currently an assistant professor of management information systems at Prairie View A&M University, College of Business, Texas. His research focuses on ICT use for interorganizational coordination and social networks among humanitarian organizations.

Katharine Vincent is a director of Kulima Integrated Development Solutions and a visiting associate professor in the School of Architecture and Planning at the University of the Witwatersrand, Johannesburg, South Africa. Her interests are in development and the human dimensions of climate change, particularly vulnerability and adaptation.

Geoff Walsham is an emeritus professor at Judge Business School, University of Cambridge, UK.

