

Contributors

Jenna Burrell is an Assistant Professor at the School of Information, University of California, Berkeley. For her PhD dissertation, she conducted an ethnographic study of Internet café users in Accra, Ghana. Previously, she worked in the People and Practices Research Group at Intel Corporation.

Regina de Angoitia is an Associate Professor at the Public Administration Division at Centro de Investigación y Docencia Económicas (CIDE) and Institutional Development Coordinator of the Telecom-CIDE research program.

Michael Douglas Futch is a pre-doctoral fellow at the Center for Pacific Economies at the University of California, San Diego.

Richard Heeks is the Chair of Development Informatics at the University of Manchester, UK, and Director of the Centre for Development Informatics (<http://www.manchester.ac.uk/cdi>). He leads the MSc and PhD programs for development, and his research focuses on the role of ICTs in socio-economic development.

Craig McIntosh is an Associate Professor of Economics in the Graduate School of International Relations and Pacific Studies at the University of California, San Diego.

Fernando Ramirez is an Associate Researcher at the Centro de Investigación y Docencia Económicas (CIDE) Telecommunications program.

Jo Rhodes is a Lecturer in the Macquarie Graduate School of Management.

Chaitali Sinha is a Program Officer at Canada's International Development Research Centre (IDRC). Her research focuses on the interactions between society and technology, notably information and communication technologies, in developing countries.

Kentaro Toyama is Assistant Managing Director of Microsoft Research India, where he also leads the Technology for Emerging Markets group as a Principal Researcher.