

Contributors

Eric Abbott is a professor in the Greenlee School of Journalism and Communication at Iowa State University, where he coordinates the university's Technology and Social Change Program. He has been a member of the management team and a researcher with the university's Center for Sustainable Rural Livelihoods.

Komathi Ale is a PhD candidate at the University of Southern California's Annenberg School for Communication and Journalism. Her research focuses on the impact of information and communication technologies for development, with a specific interest in addressing social issues in education among marginalized communities.

Elaine Byrne is a research program coordinator for the Connecting Health Research in Africa and Ireland Consortium (ChRAIC) in the Department of Epidemiology and Public Health Medicine at the Royal College of Surgeons in Ireland.

Han Ei Chew is a doctoral student in the Department of Telecommunication, Information Studies, and Media at Michigan State University.

Arul Chib is an assistant professor in the Wee Kim Wee School of Communication and Information at the Nanyang Technological University, as well as the assistant director of the Singapore Internet Research Center. Chib is the winner of the 2011 Prosper.Net-Scopus Young Scientist Award in Sustainable Development.

Marije Geldof is a post-doctoral affiliate of the ICT4D Collective at Royal Holloway, University of London, where she undertook her PhD in ICT for development (ICT4D). She is currently working in the area of mHealth as a field coordinator for D-tree International in Malawi.

Vigneswara Ilavarasan is an assistant professor in the Department of Humanities & Social Sciences, Indian Institute of Technology in Delhi. He researches information and communication technologies in India under the broad scope of work, technology, and society.

Mark Levy is a professor in the Department of Telecommunication, Information Studies, and Media at Michigan State University.

Brandie Lee Martin is a PhD candidate in the College of Communications at The Pennsylvania State University. She is also a graduate fellow at the Institute for Information Policy, The Pennsylvania State University.

Balaji Parthasarathy is an ICICI associate professor at the International Institute of Information Technology in Bangalore, India. His teaching and research interests lie at the intersection of economic globalization, technological innovation, and social change.

Emmanuel Tusiime is a logistics officer with the United Nations World Food Programme.