Contributors

Akhtar Badshah is the Senior Director of Global Community Affairs at Microsoft, where he administers the company's global community investment and employee programs. Badshah is an architect by training and a doctoral graduate of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Antonio José Junqueira Botelho is an Assistant Professor, Innovation Track, Graduate Program in Metrology, Quality and Innovation and Research Coordinator, Genesis Research Unit at PUC Rio, Brazil, and founding partner of Innovastrat Consulting and MPLC Brasil. He is a plenary member of DIRSI.

Chris Coward currently directs the Center for Information & Society's ICT and development (ICTD) research portfolio designing programs with organizations at the forefront of bringing the benefits of ICT to underserved communities.

Hopeton Dunn is the Academic Director of the Telecommunications Policy and Management Programme, Mona School of Business, University of the West Indies, Jamaica. He is also secretary general of the International Association for Media and Communication Research.

Maria Garrido is a Research Associate for the Center for Information & Society at the University of Washington. Her research explores the role of information and communication technologies in promoting employability among low-income communities in Latin America, Eastern Europe, and in a recent study, in the United States.

Luis Gutierrez is an Associate Professor at the Economics Department at the Universidad del Rosario and Lecturer in Universidad Nacional de Colombia and Universidad Eafit in Medellín. He is a plenary member of DIRSI.

Erica Johnson is a Ph.D. candidate in Political Science at the University of Washington. She studies political transitions and state-society relations in post-Soviet Central Asia.

Stefano Kluzer is a Scientific Officer in the Information Society Unit of the European Commission's Joint Research Center—Institute for Prospective Technological Studies in Sevilla. There, he is in charge of e-Inclusion research, focusing on the use of ICT for/by immigrants and ethnic minorities.

Beth Kolko is an Associate Professor of Human Centered Design & Engineering at the University of Washington and a Fellow at the Harvard University Berkman Center. She leads the Design for Digital Inclusion group that studies diversity and technology usage to generate innovative approaches for software/hardware design.

Martin Králik is former Director (Middle East and Asia) of INSEAD-eLab. He is currently a doctoral candidate at the International Islamic University Malaysia.

Bruno Lanvin is the Executive Director of INSEAD/ eLab, overseeing eLab's teams in Fontainebleau, (France), Singapore and Abu Dhabi. eLab is INSEAD's center of excellence for thought leadership, community outreach and value creation in the knowledge economy. He also manages eLab's e-skills projects for Microsoft and the European Communication.

Edgar Maldonado is a Ph.D. candidate in the College of Information Sciences and Technology at Pennsylvania State University and will complete his degree in the summer of 2009. His research focuses on the economic and social impact of Open Source solutions in private and public settings.

Judith Mariscal is a full Professor at Centro de Investigación y Docencia Economica (CIDE) and Director of the Telecommunications Research Program, Telecom-CIDE. She is a member of the Steering Committee for the ICT networks DIRSI and ACCORN, and a member of the Board of Advisors for TPRC.

Cynthia Putnam is a Ph.D. candidate in the Department of Human Centered Design & Engineering at the University of Washington. Her research includes modifications required to apply user-centered methods in technology design for underserved audiences, including people with autism and those living in developing regions.

CONTRIBUTORS

Gabriel Rissola is the owner and director of Dynamic Organization Thinking (D-O-T). D-O-T is a research and consultancy firm based in Barcelona that is very active in the fields of information society and knowledge economy, with a special interest in the role of telecenters/NGOs on e-Inclusion of disadvantaged users.

Robert Schware is a Managing Director at the Information Technology Applications Center of the Academy for Educational Development. He is also a fellow at the Center for Electronic Governance at the UNU-IIST in Macau and a former Lead IT Specialist and eGovernment Leader at the World Bank. Andrea Tapia is an Assistant Professor, Information Sciences and Technology at Penn State University. Tapia is a sociologist of information and technologies with a research focus on public institutions, government and development.

Rebecca Walton is a Ph.D. candidate in the Department of Human Centered Design & Engineering at the University of Washington. Her research experience includes ICTD projects to support public health, microfinance, and emergency logistics in regions including Africa, Central Asia, and South America.